An Australian Government Initiative

The Benefits of Mediation

Family Dispute Resolution (FDR) is a form of mediation aimed at helping separated families to develop their own parenting agreements. During FDR, families will discuss the issues in dispute and consider different options, while being encouraged to focus on the needs of their children. The main aim of FDR is to assist parents and significant others to agree on workable parenting arrangements for their children, and to find ways to improve their coparenting and communication with each other.

FDR is facilitated by a neutral and accredited Family Dispute Resolution practitioner. FDR is practical, future focused and welcoming. It can help families to deal with their separation, overcome relationship difficulties and support their children to thrive after separation.

Frequently Asked Questions

Are the services free?

The Family Relationship Centre is funded by the Australian Government. However, you may be required to pay for some services depending on your financial circumstances.

What if I need an interpreter?

We will arrange an interpreter for you.

Will be details be kept private?

Yes, in keeping with all government laws and regulations.

Who can use these services?

Anyone can contact the Centre for information and advice. We welcome families from all backgrounds and ethnic groups. We provide interpreters and support workers to help our CALD, Aboriginal, Torre Strait Islander families through this challenging phase in their lives.

My family is a Rainbow Family. Can Broadmeadows FRC provide a relevant service for me?

Yes. We work with families who identify as LGBTIQ+ and we have experienced practitioners who are familiar with how the Family Law Act works for same-sex and queer parents.
